

Your Purpose in Life and Your Big Idea

You have a Purpose in Life (PIL), and at least part of it is to write something that only you can create. The vehicle for achieving your PIL is your Big Idea, a special, unique inspiration that pops into that quirky brain of yours. Your Big Idea might be a sonnet, a blog, a story, an essay, a letter to the editor, a dissertation, a novel, a prose poem, a fairy tale, a personal narrative, an epic saga, a screenplay, a children's book, a series of funny greeting cards, or something else that only you can dream up. Your Big Idea offers beauty, inspiration, energy, a good laugh, a good cry, an insight, a solution, a good time, an epiphany, or a maybe a special combination of these. You may have your Big Idea right now, or you may be ready to discover it. Your intuition, whether you are currently aware of it or not, will be your most reliable tool for getting and acting on your Big Idea .

To make your Big Idea a reality, whatever your experience level, the key to your success will be to create a life that allows your writing to flourish. Maybe you've never written anything more than a grocery list, but you've always wanted to. Maybe you used to write, but you stopped when you got busy with a job, a family, or both. Or you might be a veteran writer who has lost touch with the magic that you once experienced, and writing has somehow become a dreaded chore. Whatever your relationship with writing, join me. We're in this together.
